A cable from the Cape to Australia would not have this disadvantage and a disadvantage must be considered to be, not only in respect of the contingency of our being engaged in war with the nations over where territory the present cables pass, but also in view of the extremely difficult and colicate question which has been reised as to whether a nation might not consider it. breach of neutrality to allow warlike mes. sages to be transmitted over lines under its 'If any additional argument were needed for the creation and maintenance by this country of a numerous and powerful cruiser flest, it would be found in the growing necessity of providing for the efficient protection of our submarine cables. We may be certain that any enemy we may engage will fishing up and severing our cable connections in every direction. Quite recently we were reminded that the Russians long ago elaborated a scheme for that purpose. Therefore Mr. Pender's contention that the Government should feel as much bound to protect its cables as it does, to protect its chips is, to say the least, most reasonable; and for the sake of the commerce of England tical sympathy in high quarters." These rewould be in cases where the cable touches foreign soil and the maintenance of compoint at which the greatest danger threatens in this direction is at Cape St. James. for there the cable passes under control of a power which, in the event of England being embroiled in war, would certainly not be very benevolent in her neutrality, to say nothing of the possibility of our being engaged in hostilities with France herself, in which immediately to cut off the British fleet in the Previous to the ceremony of unveiling the bust, a preliminary gathering was held in the chapter of the house. Besides Lord Chief Justice Coloridge and Baron Houghton, there were present Lord Aberdare, Canon Farrar, Robert Browning, Prof. Blackie, and the whole Coleridge family, including a grandson and granddaughter of the poet. Many members of the House of Commons, Noblemen, Bishops, Descons and a large number of Americans were also in attendance. Dean Bradley and Mr. Lowell entered the chapter house arm in arm. The Dean made a short speech, in which he said he heartily sympathized with the object of the meeting. He paid a high tribute to Mr. Lowell, and said he. On London. was eminently fitted to perform the duty of unveiling the statue. The ceremony, he said, would add another link to the many already that bound together England and America. Mr. Lowell replied that he would have preferred that the task of unveiling the statue had been entrusted to other hands, but the fact that the bust is the gift of the late Rev. Dr. Mercer, of Rhode Island, through his executric, Mrs. Pell, supplied that argument of fitness which would otherwise have been absent. He continued: "All the waters of Atlantic cannot wash! out of the consciousness of either nation that we hold our intellectual property in common. The literary traditions and fame of those who shed lustre upon cur race remain an undivided inheritance... Coleridge's works are a companion and teacher in the happiest hours of our youth, and in old age recall the radiant images of the - youth which we have lost. Coloridge was a metaphysical teacher, and interpreter whose services are incalculable." the month. Mr. Lowell said he admired, especially the "Ancient Mariner," far more, indeed, than "Christsbel." Mr. Coleride was a man of artless simplicity, and yet a finished schölar, although not exact. He owed much to the genius. He was picturesque in the best sense of the term. Mr. Lowell concluded :- "This is neither the time nor place to speak of Coloridge's conduct to himself, his family or the world. He left behind him a great name; let those who are blamsless cast the first stone at one who might have been better had he possessed those business faculties which make man respectable. He left us such a legacy as only genius, and genius not always, can leave." [Cheers.] Lord Coloridge returned thanks on behalf the family. The assemblage then went to the Poets' Corner and Mr. Lowell formally unvailed the statue, which bears the simple inscription.
